

such as love, justice

Commitment to certain abstract principles, constitute the highest self-fulfillment.

There is always a gap, if not an abyss, between the beliefs one committed to & the way one lives.

Most of them one shames.

I can't trust any human creature. We are constantly betraying & betrayed.

I am saying that I am a sceptic. I am sceptical even of myself.

People are usually judged by what ^{they have} they perform or how they defend their ideals.

Give me several months & license ^{power} / ^{toppy - funny} / ^{permission}, I can convert atheists to Christians or communists to capitalists. Free will is just an illusion. We are all manipulated & shaped by the design of our culture.

It is not the environment that determines our beings not the reaction of ourselves to the environment that determines our beings.

Deliberate control & unintentional control are just the same. They work in the same way.

My life is so unintelligible that I can no longer rationalize or justify it. Sometimes I am contemplating of suicide.

Portrait of an iconoclast

Lend me your eyes. Students, Marxists, Christians, administrators, activists. I must admit that I am no sage by myself. I am but a fool - a fool unlike those who talk about their ideologies glibly, or else express themselves adequately. By an unnatural twist of dialectics, I would maintain that vices are virtues and virtues are vices. I would talk of something - that something makes people cry, laugh, die or drive them ~~then~~ ^{sees} mad. Something that is so flickering and fictive as the mind.

Man is a creature of finitude. His life is strung together by a mosaic of ~~mean~~ meaningless fragments, out of which man creates its meaning. Human life is but an absurd drama.

Brother & sister, can you ~~lead me~~ ^{pure} a dime? Have you been stabbed on the back by someone you love? Have you woken up with all your beloved or hated turned to skeleton & skull? I cannot trust any human creature or creature. We are constantly betraying & betrayed. What is man then? Man is then a hypocrite from within, a puppet from without. No shame to those hypocrites - for they are the true rulers of our kind. Hypocrisy is a vice as well as a virtue. I cannot imagine the world without hypocrisy. For man & woman, I know too well to have myself understood. I would agree that all religion, politics, science & morality are but rationalizations & justification of human naivetes & irrationalities. Marxism, Christianity or even democracy are but the myths of the times. Pieces of intellectual absurdities (I would say garbage) men endorse. History proceeds without laws. Man is ~~not~~ neither necessary nor sufficient. Uncertainty is the lord of control.

Devotion to a certain form of ideology, or god or ideals of whatever kind is a form of self-deception. It works good for people. They need it. They cherish it ^{they live up to it}. They praise it. They curse it. They fight & die for it. There may well be brilliant martyrs who sacrifice their lives to validate their own beliefs, to validate their own selves. But the very moment & act of this self-validation also leads to self-destruction. Self-sacrifice is suicide turned inside out. It is still a kind of suicide. Death carries with it its own seed of destruction.

However, beliefs are also always divorced from actions, either intentionally or unconsciously. It makes no difference. It is also a form of self-deception. [I know that I am using a double bond: self-deception is inescapable; no matter how we live]

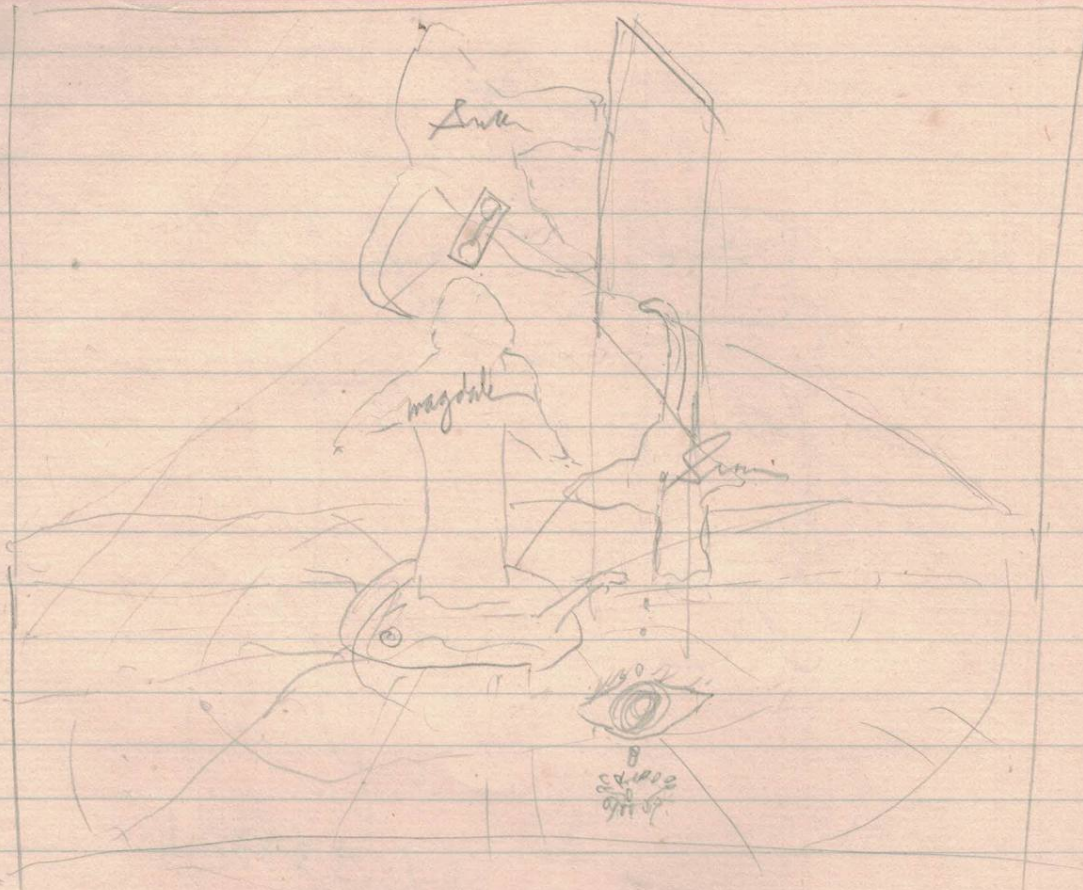

My mind is sick, simply because I cannot accept or believe self-deception. I need self-deception. I always want it. To live is to deceive oneself.

There is no humanity as such. Man is a deplorable animal. He needs control. He can't be respected for he does not know what is respect. Autonomy, freedom or self-determination are just continuances / devices to justify man's deeds. What is it in their hearts?
